Our new editorial advisory board offers a fresh perspective

by Laura Judy

As we celebrate our fifth anniversary, we are eager to take this opportunity to continue to make Atlanta Home Improvement an ever-expanding resource for our readers. In order to make sure we gather the best and most up-to-date information, we have restructured our editorial advisory board for 2006-2007.

Our new board includes experts in industries from landscaping and green remodeling to organization and interior design. Throughout the coming year, we will be consulting with them as we prepare our editorial content to ensure that you are getting the best information from some of the top sources in the field.

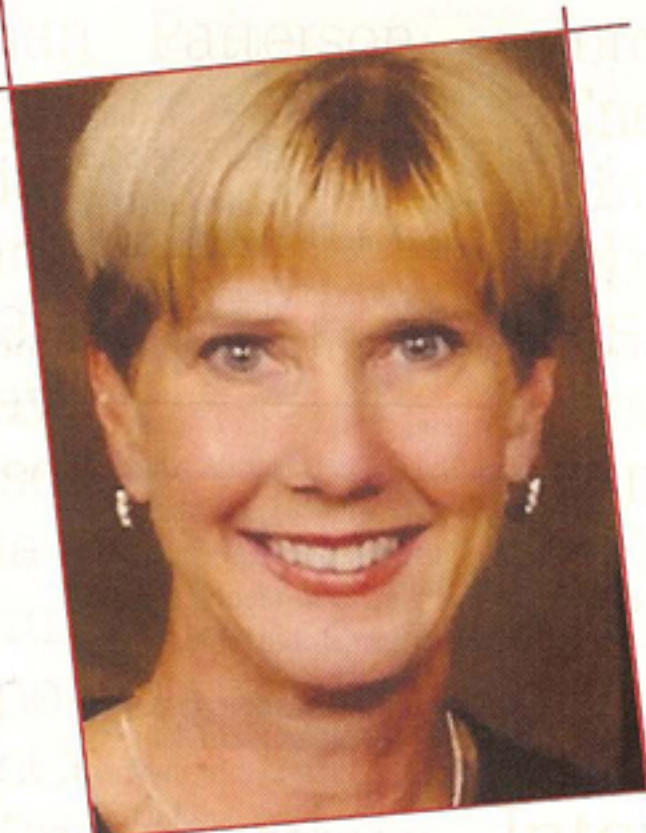

Each of our board members is eager to help us develop new ideas while staying on top of some hot industry topics. Some of the things they hope to see us cover in the upcoming year are the costs of remodeling and design services specific to Atlanta, the downsizing of homes to save money and energy, the effects of infill housing, usability versus appearance in all types of home-improvement projects, creating realistic budgets and expectations, using native plants and organics in our landscapes, and more.

As we proceed into our sixth year, we are excited about making the magazine an even better resource by providing fresh articles, reader-friendly layouts, new interactive checklists and guides, and reliable sources to help you improve your home. We look forward to consulting with our new panel of experts as we strive to bring you the best information possible.
