The owners of this Eurostyle house wanted to counterbalance the ornate nature of the rooms adjacent to the kitchen by creating a warm, casual space for the family to mingle in.

The mantel hood, fluted posts and dentil are a nod to the original nature of the house. The flat-panel door style was created in a rich cherry finish and updates the look in a casual, yet classic manner.

The staggered heights, addition of glass, use of beadboard in the glass cabinetry and on the back of the island, spool legs, arched valance with pedestal feet, flutes with rosettes, and decorative corbels, create intimacy in an otherwise cavernous space that lacked architectural interest.

The biggest challenge, says the designer, was creating storage to compensate for the 78in mantel hood and 36in professional range.

The solution was to integrate many design and storage solutions within the cabinetry – such as pull-out trash and base units, lazy susan insert, rollout drawers, and stacked walls.

The detailing and finish on the perimeter cabinetry was contrasted by the darker cabinetry used on the island, with its more simplified styling. Granite countertops act as the unifying feature between the two cabinetry styles.

Stainless steel appliances and fixtures aid in contemporizing the space.
